Contabilidad Básica, de Joaquín Moreno Fernández. Preparada para la enseñanza del Índice ITI y de Gratuito Vol.1. Implementation of a Team-Based Support Model for Managing Self-Administration of Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation in a Newborn Intensive Care Unit. This article describes an evidence-based evidence-practice model implemented in a newborn intensive care unit (NICU) for supporting parents and medical personnel to provide adequate cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) when a neonate requires resuscitation. The model focuses on having the parent or first responder appropriately provide CPR while allowing the medical team to deliver advanced life support, and it is consistent with national guidelines. The model uses a low-fidelity manikin (Laerdal Resusci Anne) to encourage continuous chest compressions while providing hands-free ventilation. A parental training program supports hands-on practice in providing CPR using the Resusci Anne. This model has been successfully implemented in a single institution with favorable response by parents and staff.

Q: Rails, if statement I am trying to display certain items from an array based on the value of the variable "filter". Obviously this does not work, as it just passes through and iterates through every record. How can I achieve what I'm trying to do? EDIT: @things has only one property category (string) but there are multiple records. The Category property determines what type of thing it is. Filter is a drop down containing multiple categories (an example might be "animals" and "machines", etc) A: Can you not use has_many :through to achieve what you are after? class Thing belongs_to :category has_many :things_in_category end class Category has_many :things end class ThingInCategory belongs_to :thing end Then when you select your filter use something like: @things = Thing.where(:category => your_filter)

"If we didn't [pay for sports], then we are criminals," said an ordinary person at the recent XpatSoc conference. "We have the right to access sports just like any other citizen." However, sports clubs have been refusing to admit certain categories of non-citizens, due to the rising cost of owning a sports team. Meanwhile, the costs of organising a sports team is going up. For example, if a club wants to play a big-name football club, like Bayern Munich, the cost will be €60,000 (about US$75,000). And the FIFA Women's World Cup in Vancouver costs €50 million. Next year's World Cup in Brazil, meanwhile, will be a record-breaker, costing a staggering €4.5 billion. Legalising non-citizens in football would solve these problems. Where do non-citizens play? While some clubs won't admit non-citizens, others will, and even some top clubs already do this, albeit slowly. In Spain, for example, 11 clubs have admitted non-Spanish nationals; the big-name Barcelona team has three foreigners in their squad. In England, too, non-EU players are permitted, although there is no limit on how many non-citizens may be on a team. So, if a club like Manchester City or Arsenal wants to play a Spanish or English non-EU national, then why not permit them? "For more than 10 years, we have been waiting for a response from major international sport associations, but so far, they haven't made a positive response," said a representative from an English club at the
